The campaign is now starting in earnest and all participants are preparing for a fast and interesting race. A glance over the list will convince the most skeptical that it is bound to be some battle.

So close is the battle of credits that one or two "clubs" of subscriptions for which one receives 100,000 EXTRA credits, would put any one of the leading candidates over the top, and change the postiions en-

The More The Merrier.

A very remarkable fact about a campaign of this nature is that the larger the numher of candidates the easier it is to win. It means that you are not called upon to cover such a large territory, but rath er to make the most of your own particular locality.

The race is just getting started and there is no telling who will be in the lead next week at this time. An entirely new candidate could enter the campaign now, and with but little effort get enough subscriptions by Saturday night to head the
